How Some of the Dumb Creatures Kill "Many animals," says an observing writer, "will commit suicide to relieve themselves from great pain. Snakes lic, Presbyterian, Methodist and Conwill lacerate themselves when suffering from intense heat. I have observed spiders do the same, biting at their leas and available parts with suicidal intent. Place a ring of fire around a scorpion, and it will invariably destroy itself rather than suffer the torture of heat, and I have often seen ants tear their own legs and try to destroy themselves was obtained. A case came under my in degree from our own. On questioning an old farmer in the Adirondack country last summer, if he knew of any cases of animal suicide, he referred me that rashed down into the sea and were drowned. He said that the swine preferred death to evil spirits, and so committed suicide. But this interpretation won't be found in the revised edition. He told me that several of his hogs in trying to swim across a large pond, evidently save out in the middle, and before he could get to them they had killed themselves. Their throats were cut, evidently by their fore feet. His idea was that they began to give out and had cut their throats; but this was evidently only accidental. Their increased struggles had caused the wounds, which were fatal, the cuts being vertical wounds, deep, and five or six inches long. But among the star fishes suicide mies and escaping pair.
